And if you haven't seen the show, make sure you get your Game of Thrones fix on Sunday. If you don't have the HBO Go app on your device, you can also find Season 4 on GoFrog, HBO's site for streaming content. Dec 22 (Reuters) - The value of the biggest U.S. stocks in the S&P 500 SPX fell for the first time this year on Monday after the U.S. Federal Reserve announced interest rate cuts and signaled continued stimulus, driving the dollar and Treasury yields higher and dragging down the U.S. benchmark stock index. The Fed, which concluded its two-day policy meeting on Sunday, said it was confident a solid economic recovery would continue after slashing its benchmark federal funds rate by a total of 150 basis points. "The Fed's first rate hike in over 10 years was a non-event. Investors are just worried that it might have been too aggressive," said Chris Weston, managing director at PRIMECAP US. "They don't think they could get through the entire tightening cycle." Traders said sentiment was under pressure after U.S. Senate Majority Leader Mitch McConnell said the Republican-controlled chamber will make no effort to support a plan to overhaul the U.S. tax system before next month's congressional elections, citing opposition from its own party. The comments, coupled with fresh worries over the economic impact of the coronavirus outbreak, added to a stock market rout that has $2157476af
